

Progress Report

Senate Judiciary Committee in the 114th Congress

Chairman Chuck Grassley

May 12, 2016

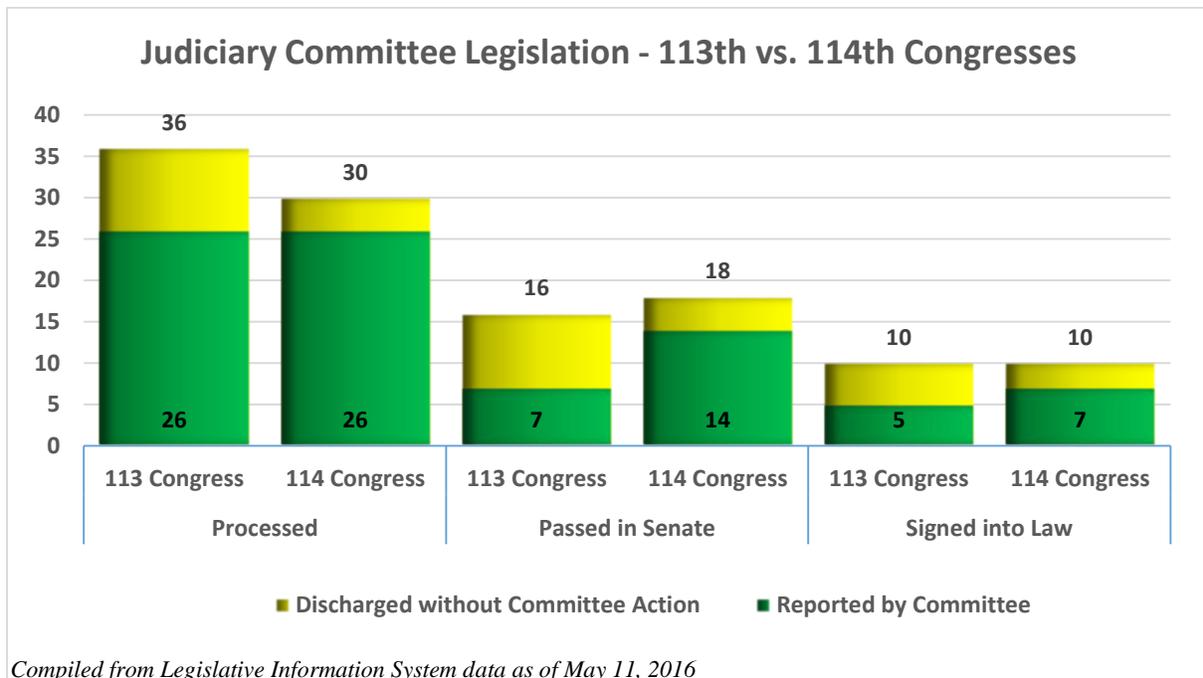

Summary

Upon becoming Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee at the start of the 114th Congress, Senator Chuck Grassley pledged that he would strive to be fair while restoring the committee's role as a "true check on the massive and powerful federal bureaucracy." In the months that followed, the Senate Judiciary Committee has been working in a largely bipartisan fashion to meet these goals. The committee, under Grassley's leadership, is on pace to exceed its legislative productivity in the previous Congress. The committee is also on track to match nominations benchmarks set in past similar scenarios. Grassley's longstanding focus on oversight has put the committee in position to renew its focus on ensuring accountability and transparency in government as mandated by the Constitution.

Legislation

The Senate Judiciary Committee's legislative agenda in the 114th Congress has been marked by a commitment to bipartisanship, an increase in productivity and a return to regular order. Under Grassley's leadership thus far, the committee has reported to the Senate 26 bills, all with bipartisan support. Of those bills, eight are authored by Senators in the minority party. By contrast, in the entire previous Congress, the committee reported 26 bills, all of which were authored by the majority party, and several were reported on a party line vote.

Thus far this Congress, 14 bills reported out of committee (60.8%) have been passed by the full Senate and seven (30.4%) have been signed into law. By contrast, in the 113th Congress, only seven bills reported out of committee (26.9%) were passed by the full Senate, and only five (19.2%) were signed into law.

In the 114th Congress, significantly fewer bills have been discharged from the Judiciary Committee, and have instead followed the regular order of committee consideration. While the committee processed more legislation in the entire 113th Congress than in the 114th Congress to date, it is on pace to advance more legislation via regular order under Grassley's leadership, and has already exceeded the 113th Congress in bills passed by the Senate and signed into law under regular order.

The following bills have been processed by the Judiciary Committee in the 114th Congress:

The committee is poised to report more bills at this Thursday's markup and will continue to consider legislation throughout the remainder of the 114th Congress.

Judicial Nominations

Presidents have the authority, under Article II Section 2 of the U.S. Constitution, to nominate individuals to lifetime federal judgeships. That same constitutional provision requires that the Senate provide advice and consent for the nominee to be appointed. The Senate, therefore, was intended to be a check on the President's power to fill the courts. The Judiciary Committee under Grassley's leadership has considered nominations at a pace similar to that of the 110th Congress, which was also the last two years of George W. Bush's second term, under the same circumstances as the current situation.

Thus far in the 114th Congress, the Judiciary Committee has held hearings for 38 of President Obama's nominees to the federal bench. Nomination hearings slated for later this month will bring that number to 43, equal to the number of nominees who received hearings from a Democrat-led Judiciary Committee at the same point in President George W. Bush's presidency.

Notably, the Judiciary Committee does not set the schedule for confirmation votes by the full Senate. The Senate has confirmed 324 of President Obama's judicial nominees so far. At the same point in President Bush's tenure, the Senate had only confirmed 303 nominees.

Government Oversight & Accountability

Congress has a responsibility to ensure the laws it passes are faithfully executed through oversight of the executive branch. As Chairman, Grassley pledged to hold the federal bureaucracy accountable to the American people, by restoring the committee's role as a true check on the massive and powerful federal bureaucracy. The committee should ask questions, demand answers and help hold the executive branch accountable for its actions. The American people deserve a federal government that works for them, not against them.

Throughout the 114th Congress, The Judiciary Committee, initiated inquiries into federal government practices across the alphabet soup of the bureaucracy. This includes reviews of grant fraud within the Department of Justice, excessive use of funds and inappropriate hiring practices by the U.S. Marshals Service, retaliation against whistleblowers in various government agencies, shoddy records retention by the State Department, inadequate responses to federal records requests by various agencies, and the consequences of failing to enforce immigration laws.

Grassley has continued to be the Senate's champion for whistleblowers who report waste, fraud and abuse within the federal government. From the Judiciary Committee chairmanship, Grassley founded the bipartisan Whistleblower Protection Caucus to help educate colleagues about the positive impact of whistleblowers.

Thus far in the 114th Congress, the Judiciary Committee has sent more than 450 letters to more than 55 federal agencies, 20 organizations and 15 individuals in an effort to expand government transparency and accountability, and to address waste and misconduct.
